4.15pm Chair's summary and conference close

In November 2010 Andrew Lansley allocated an additional £70m to PCTs for the advancement of re-ablement services, in particular those linked to hospital discharge.

This roadshow addresses the main challenges faced by organisations in establishing effective services in the current policy and economic environment.

An enduring and complex issue is how to include all stakeholders in service planning and delivery; local authorities, PCTs (and GP consortia), healthcare providers, carers, occupational therapists and, most importantly service users themselves and their families.

This means finding and implementing new ways of working at all levels and across both healthcare and social care providers, to create a cohesive, inclusive and considered business model that engages providers and users, is cost effective, with clear outcomes accountability and longer term implications (health, financial and social) well in view.

This roadshow aims to bring together the main stakeholders in homecare re-ablement services. Together we will examine and discuss what good practice looks like, for the service user and for service providers within your region and local community, and across the UK. Through shared insights and expertise delegates will consider how they and their organisations can embed this in everyday practice.

Aims

- To create a forum for debate and discussion around current issues
- To showcase best practice in the region
- To bring service providers and commissioners, community members, and policy makers together in one conversation
- To foster productive working relationships and communities of practice across and within groups
- To provide delegates with tools, tips, new perspectives and connections to take back to their organisations

Welsh focus:

Martyn Palfreman of SSIA has helped to shape the roadshow programme for the Cardiff event, which will address specifically the state of play and ongoing developments in reablement in Wales.

SSIA is running a major national programme (<http://www.ssiacymru.org.uk/index.cfm?articleid=4845>) on transformation of services for older people in Wales, in which reablement plays a pivotal role.

This work builds upon work undertaken across Wales over recent years at local, regional and national level and also a 2010 national study undertaken for SSIA by John Bolton, formerly of Department of Health.

The programme's early outcomes up to March 2012, will be presented and discussed at the roadshow by John Bolton.

Case studies at the Cardiff roadshow will draw from local examples of good practice. Martyn Palfreman of SSIA will lead discussion on the possibility of trialling a universal offer of reablement prior to assessment to reduce ongoing demand and promoting long-term independence.
