

Session 1.9: Writing a group policy

Activity sheet 1.9.1: Respect check

You have learned what respect is. You know that everyone needs to be kept safe. You know that there should be no prejudice or discrimination. You know that everyone is important. You know that you and other people are important.

This means that everyone in your group is important.

You have been in this group for a few weeks.

Have you all respected each other?

What have you done well?

Activity sheet 1.9.2: 'Respect-for-all' policy 1

All groups need to have a respect-for-all policy. All groups should treat everyone equally and not be prejudiced or discriminate against certain people. Everyone in the group should feel safe.

Think of eight ways you can respect each other in a group.

- 1.
- 2.
- 3.
- 4.
- 5.
- 6.
- 7.
- 8.

Activity sheet 1.9.2: A 'respect-for-all' policy 2

Now, write your own 'respect-for-all' policy.

Activity sheet 1.9.3: Comparing your policy with another

Look at the respect-for-all policy that one group wrote. Is it similar to yours? Is it different?

'Respect-for-All' Policy

- Don't pick on people because of the way they look.
- No racism.
- No calling people names.
- Respect other people's religion.
- Accept the way they are but not bad behaviour.
- Don't make comments about people's size, either fat or thin or short or tall.
- No violence.
- No lies especially about other people.
- Talk to people rather than shout at them.
- Be fair.
- Respect other people's property – don't steal or break it.
- Respect men and women equally.
- Don't touch anyone unless they want you to.
- Respect other's sexual orientation.
- No looking down on people.
- No taking your moods out on people.
- Give people space if they ask for it.
- No spitting at people.
- Treat disabled people with dignity.
- Respect ourselves.

Activity sheet 1.9.4: What I've learned about respect

You have learned a lot in this group. Think of 3 things that you have learned that you can do in the future to help you respect yourself and other people.
